Destiny 2 has finally released its first beta test, and the community is jumping into the game to test out what they can do in a brand new game. Bungie has even opened the beta up to players who already own the game, and provided a beta key for those who don't already own a copy. Players are going to be able to get their hands on the beta soon, as it's already available to download from the PlayStation Store for users in Australia, Europe, and North America. In addition to the new Power Level cap, the beta offers a brand new

Raid, Trials of the Nine, which is a solo activity. This is a unique activity because you have to make sure you kill every single enemy in the level without dying once.
